THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

IRAN EXECUTES NUCLEAR SCIENTIST FOR SPYING FOR US

Iran has executed an Iranian nuclear scientist detained in 2010 when he returned home from the United States, after a court convicted him of spying for Washington, a spokesman for the judiciary said on Sunday. "Through his connection with the United States, [Shahram] Amiri gave vital information about the country to the enemy," Gholam-Hossein Mohseni-Ejei told a weekly news conference, state news agency IRNA reported. Mohseni-Ejei said a court had sentenced Amiri to death and the sentence had been upheld by Iran's supreme court, IRNA said. REUTERS

ISIS CLAIMS CAPTURE OF US WEAPONS IN AFGHANISTAN

2 Militants linked to Islamic State have released photos that purport to show weapons and equipment that belonged to American soldiers and were captured by the group in eastern Afghanistan. The photos, which came to light on Saturday, show an American portable rocket launcher, radio, grenades and other gear not commonly used by Afghan troops, as well as close-up views of identification cards for a U.S. Army soldier, Spc. Ryan Larson. The U.S. military command in Kabul denied any suggestion the soldier had been captured, saying he "has been accounted for and remains in a duty status within his unit." American special operations troops have been fighting alongside Afghan forces in a renewed offensive against militants who claim allegiance to Islamic State in Nangarhar Province, which borders Pakistan. REUTERS

CUBA BLAMES US OPEN DOOR FOR MIGRANT SURGE

3 Havana blamed Washington for a surge of Cubans trying to reach the U.S. by land and sea, accusing the Obama administration of encouraging illegal and unsafe immigration. Tens of thousands of Cubans over the last two years have flocked to the border and taken to the sea in hopes of reaching Florida, fearing a growing detente between the Cold War foes will lead to a change in U.S. policy. Under a 1960s law, the Cuban Adjustment Act, the Communist-run country's citizens are treated as legal immigrants if they set foot on U.S. soil, while migrants from any other land are considered illegal. A government statement carried by media and announcing the arrival of 14 Cubans deported by Colombia, said they were the "victims of the politicization of the migration issue by the U.S. government which stimulates illegal and unsafe immigration." REUTERS

A heat wave will be descending on the Northeast later this week, making for an uncomfortable commute. GETTY IMAGES

NEXT HEAT WAVE ON DECK

Temperatures remained very warm Sunday with a few locations kissing 90 degrees in the Northeast, but it didn't feel that way because of a drop in humidity. As the saying goes, "It's not the heat, it's the humidity."

You should be able to lighten up on your deodorant Monday and Tuesday as humidity levels will remain lower. Your subway ride will feel a bit more pleasant. There's nothing worse than being squeezed in like human sardines on a hot summer day and the air conditioning goes on the blink.

So enjoy it while it lasts because the heat and humidity will make a big-time comeback for the second half of this week, and could last through the weekend.

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

The humidity will arrive Wednesday, along with scattered showers and thunderstorms, with temperatures in the 80s from Philly and New York City to Boston.

The heat wave will commence on Thursday, with temperatures soaring into the 90s along with a ton of humidity all along the Interstate 95 corridor.

The big question is, just how hot and just how far north will the heat penetrate? Philadelphia and New York City should be full-on into it and a couple of models extend it into New England as well. The other question is, just how widespread will storms become by this weekend?

Right now, my thinking is it should be quite stormy this weekend, especially on Sunday. This will put somewhat of a lid on the temperature surge, but the humidity levels will put us in the steam-bath category. Whether we hit 90 or above through the weekend, or a couple of notches below, it's just a matter of semantics. You're going to sweat your posterior off.

Following Cambridge's lead, Boston exploring ban on plastic bags

Could plastic bags at retail stores go the way of CFCs in hairspray, DDTs in pesticides and gas-guzzling Hummers?

That's the hope of some lawmakers in the Bay State, who are considering prohibiting most retailers from offering customers the thin plastic bags, citing the myriad environmental hazards associated with them.

Most recently, Boston city councilors voted to support a proposal by Council President Michelle Wu and Councilor Matt O'Malley to kick-start a 90-day study to look at ways the city could reduce plastic bag use, including proposing new laws.

"What the city will look like, what the planet will look like 10, 30, 100 years from now, it's unavoidable that we should be taking strong action on environmental issues," Council President Wu said, according to the Boston Herald. "This particular issue of single-use plastic bags has come up again and again. ... I hope putting together a working group will really accelerate the conversation."

Should Boston adopt a ban sometime down the road, they wouldn't be without company: There are already 35 cities and towns — representing about 13 percent of the state's population — with bans on the bags, according to a report from the Sierra Club. In fact, Massachusetts is second only to California in terms of the numbers of local governments with similar regulations.

There was even a bill to ban the bags statewide that passed the state Senate this year, but failed to reach a vote in the House. Gov. Charlie Baker and some retailers groups signaled they were opposed to the idea, with Retailers Association of Massachusetts President Jon Hurst calling it a "nanny-state type of proposal" to the Herald.

But, advocates say, careless overuse of the cheap bags can cause considerable harm, harming or even killing wildlife, clogging storm drains and other municipal systems and complicating efforts to fight litter.

The bags are also made from nonrenewable fossil fuels, with millions of barrels of oil used to make an estimated 100 billion plastic bags in the U.S. each year. Worse yet, the bags are not biodegradable, meaning they won't break down for hundreds of years. Nationwide, only about 5.2 percent of them are ever recycled, according to EPA figures.

Representatives from the Cambridge Department of Public Works didn't immediately respond to a request for comment, but a report published on the department's website details what they described as "significant" effects since the law went into effect on March 31. Nearly 1,000 businesses in the city dropped the use of plastic bags on that day.

The Cambridge law not only banned the thin plastic bags, but required businesses to charge at least 10 cents apiece for other single-use bags, such as those made from paper. The department said it surveyed "several large Cambridge businesses" and said they "found a sizeable reduction in the consumption of single-use bags."

"We saw a reduction in single-use bags of 50 percent to 80 percent across this group," Meera Singh, of the city's Recycling Advisory Committee, said in a statement.

Cambridge's rules also included a provision that provided 8,000 reusable bags to low-income and senior residents throughout the city to help make the transition. CHRIS CAESAR

GOING FOR GOLD

The torch is aflame, Zika fears are rampant and the Olympics are underway. Personally, I'm hoping the games will distract me from all the rough and tumble here in D.C. for a while, but I'm not counting on it. Here are three things to watch in politics this week.

1. HAMMER THROW

A little coaching advice for Hillary Clinton: Grab your email controversy, spin around and throw it as far away as possible. And never mention it again. The Democratic nominee seems hell bent on proving she did nothing wrong with her email practices, despite an FBI investigation which found precisely the opposite. Clinton's repeated false statements about the matter are only reinforcing her worst problem: Most voters don't trust her. Let's see if she figures that out and does what she should have done from the start — take the blame, fully accept the findings and quit talking about it.

2. WEIGHT LIFTING

Last week was horrible for Republican nominee Donald Trump. Clinton came out of her convention with a big bounce GOPers and quit raising claims he can't back when challenged. In other words, he has to show more discipline while not losing the anti-establishment, "I say what I think" vibe that has made him into a political phenomenon.

3. TEAM SLOVENIA

Is Melania Trump's immigration record a problem for her husband? That's not clear yet. But Democrats are crowing over discrepancies in her "coming to America" story which suggest a possible violation of immigration laws. Watch for Dems to pound the issue, if only to distract Trump. Meanwhile, it all revolves (no kidding) around some nude photos on the internet of the wannabe first lady which ... um ... wait, what was I saying?

in the polls, and a series of missteps sent his support plummeting. Now he has to haul those numbers back into close contention. And as much as it may pain Trump, that means he'll have to get cozier with mainstream

Is Ben Affleck back to being a hot mess?

To the untrained eye, it appears Ben Affleck was channeling his inner Britney 2007 over the weekend. But not so fast, says a friend. Despite leaving a "Suicide Squad" premiere with his zipper down and shirt tucked into his belt, we're to believe that Affleck — who remains estranged from wife Jennifer Garner because the world is a vampire and everything you know about love is a lie — has things under control. "That picture is outside another small after-after-party," the source tells Page Six. "It was very late at night. He's not off the rails. It looked a lot worse than it was." We're rooting for you, Ben — but if you shave your head, we're calling your mom. MONICA WEYMOUTH

The Go-Go's want to know 'where the f—k' are the new Go-Go's

As they approach their final tour (ever), drummer Gina Schock reflects on their 40-year career.

LINDA LABAN

The Go-Go's CARL TIMPONE

After 38 years in the music industry, The Go-Go's are saying goodbye. Well, just to touring.

This summer, the band that wowed the 1980s with such hits as "We Got the Beat" and "Our Lips Are Sealed" is on its farewell tour. But we haven't heard the last of the Go-Go's, a Gwyneth Paltrow-produced musical, "Head Over Heels," which marries a 15th century story with the Go-Go's songs, is due to open on Broadway next year.

We spoke with drummer Gina Schock just before the first date of this final tour, and she was fired-up.

It's days before the first gig of what will be your farewell tour. Does it feel any different to the lead up to any other tour?
I'm like a f—king mad-woman. It's crunch time; the pressure is on. It's cool; it's part of the job. We can do this.

Is this the end of the Go-Go's?
The musical should open next year. It's mind-blowing and gorgeous. We will continue to work together as projects come up. But this tour is the final tour.

Was putting together the last setlist tough?

We're doing a longer set than usual. We will be playing new songs — we will be playing our version of "Wrecking Ball." The arrangement is fantastic. We'll be doing some songs we haven't played since we wrote them in 1979. We're pulling out everything and seeing how it goes.

No city puts the famous on a pedestal quite like L.A., so being a young famous band in L.A. must have been amazing?

It was insane and beautiful at the same time. It was magical. I grew up dreaming of being a rock star. I drove to LA in my father's pick-up truck with everything I owned. I am an American success story and proof that dreams can come true.

After 40 years, you're still called an all-girl rock group, not just a rock group. Does this show how little things have changed for women in the music business?

That doesn't bother us at all. The music business has gotten better for women. But we often talk about this and say, where are the new Go-Go's? Why hasn't that happened yet? That we are still the most successful all-girl group is what makes us wonder. Where the f—k are they?

Viola Davis loves playing a badass

Award-winning actress gets to portray arguably the scariest person in "Suicide Squad."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

There are many horror stories from the set of "Suicide Squad." For his comic book movie about a team of villains rounded up to save the world, filmmaker David Ayer ("Fury") encouraged his actors to get really, really into character. For Viola Davis, who plays Amanda Waller, the manipulative government official who created the titular squad, she was asked to keep calling fellow actor Joel Kinnaman a "p—ssy."

And yet Davis, 50, couldn't have had a better time. Still reeling from reuniting with the cast for the "Suicide Squad" junket, the two-time Oscar-nominee and Emmy-winner gushes about a very unique experience.

Viola Davis plays Amanda Waller, the ruthless government official who forces a group of villains to save the world, in "Suicide Squad." WARNER BROS. PICTURES

Apart from calling Kinnaman names, were there other things Ayer would have you do?

That was pretty much the height of it. But what [Ayer] constantly encouraged me to do was tap into my power and not shy away from it at all. Whenever I did something, he would say, "Nuh-uh. Louder! Harder!" It was a great exercise in terms of tapping into my power and understanding how much further I need to go in my life.

Amanda Waller can sometimes be the movie's most villainous character. But the film doesn't judge her.

Look who she had to lead! Look who she had to control! Harley Quinn, Killer Croc, who's a cannibal — you would have to be pretty badass to control them. You have to be just as ruthless as they are.

She sounds like she was fun to play.
I had a blast.

This is a comic book movie, but it does have much to say about how we treat people who are different than us.

I always go, the line I have in the movie where I talk about Killer Croc: "He grew up looking like a monster and pretty soon, people treated him like a monster. After awhile, he believed he was a monster." That's what we do to outsiders, with people we label as "those people." They begin to act like outsiders. They begin to feel like outsiders.

Was it hard to shake off?
I'm one of those actors who never has a hard time shaking off roles. But I did see this rearing its ugly head in little parts of my life. I'd have a little bit more bite to me than usual. I'd shut down a little too much, to the point where it kind of scared me.

Stop faking it on the job

The author of "The Art of Authenticity" shares her tips for finding a job that's right for you.

HAYLEY GREASON
letters@metro.us

It's easy to get caught up in the stress of finding a job, but workplace psychologist Karissa Thacker says not to worry.

For Thacker, the founder and president of Strategic Performance Solutions, a management training and consulting firm that works with Fortune 500 companies to teach people about authentic leadership, success is just a matter of being yourself.

To get Thacker's expertise, you don't need to make an appointment — just check out her book, "The Art of Authenticity: Tools to Become an Authentic Leader and Your Best Self."

Thacker offered her tips for recent graduates seeking that elusive first job — and a perfect fit.

Get to know yourself

The root of the word "authentic" means "author" in Greek. Being authentic, suggests Thacker, means being the author of your own story — but before you can know your story, you have to know yourself.

"When I have conversations with college students who seem to like the jobs & education

book and really resonate with it, I always say, 'You haven't totally discovered who you are yet,'" Thacker said.

Before you can decide if a company is a good fit for you, you should have an idea of your strengths, weaknesses and preferences. Need a little help finding clarity? Thacker includes a character test in her book that helps illuminate your strongest and weakest personality traits.

Feel it out

Finding a job that brings out your most authentic self can be achieved only if you find a company that plays to your character strengths.

Start by taking what you know about your personality and asking yourself these three questions during or after the interview: Do you connect with the people? Do you feel energized and excited about working for the company? What does the atmosphere feel like?

Being authentic is also about being genuine.

"The thing that will define your early career is your ability to learn fast," said Thacker. "If you're not energized or interested in what's going on there, you're not going to learn from it."

Give it a year

Thacker is aware of concerns about finding a good job after graduating. So if you're not that excited about an opportunity, but for now it's your best option, she suggests giving it at least a year.

"This idea that we already know who we are and it's fixed and rigid — be careful there. You can join a company and grow into it and realize you liked things you never knew you liked."

Being authentic can help you land the job that's best for you. istock

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Network, network, network

Thacker insists that networking is about more than just collecting business cards. For example, she likes to use the birthday card function on LinkedIn to send personalized messages.

Says Thacker, "You can think about networking as, 'I'm going to add 20 business cards to my collection,' or you can think about networking as, 'These are people that I've worked with, and like, and actually have developed a rapport with, so I'm going to keep my relationships active with them.'"

Patriots positional preview: Wide receivers

The Pats are still looking for that go-to outside guy.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

We know that Tom Brady is going to sit out the first four games of the regular season.

That means it's on Jimmy Garoppolo to get on the same page as his wide receivers.

The problem? Not all of those wide receivers can get on the field. Both Julian Edelman and Danny Amendola have begun training camp on the PUP list, which means they can't take part in any activities on the field until they're cleared.

Even the most casual of Patriots fans know how important Edelman is to the team's offense. He's Brady's go-to guy in a pinch and a target monster. But it's still very early in camp and there's no reason yet to believe that Edelman and Amendola won't be ready to go before the season begins.

The locks

Julian Edelman, Danny Amendola, Chris Hogan, Malcolm Mitchell, Matthew Slater
When Edelman went down with a broken foot last season, roughly 10 targets per game went with him. In nine regular season games he had 61 receptions for 692 yards and a career-high seven touchdowns. Edelman can expect to see similar production this season, but being a slot receiver, health is always a concern.

It was a bit of a surprise to see Amendola take a pay cut and restructure his contract to stick with the Patriots another season, but certainly nobody is complaining. When Brady looks away from Edelman and Rob Gronkowski and over to Amendola, he's been able to make the big catch.

A newcomer to the wide receiver corps this season is Chris Hogan. Hogan signed a three-year deal with the Pats and has wasted no time in jelling with Brady and Garoppolo. The opportunity has been there with Edelman and Amendola on the shelf.

"Any chance that you get to be on the field and get an opportunity to catch, run, whatever it is, whenever you're on this field everything is being evaluated," Hogan recently told reporters, "so you want to make the most of every single opportunity that you get."

Who is Malcolm Mitchell? Well, if you've been following training camp, you know the rookie out of Georgia has been one of the more impressive players thus far. Mitchell was taken in the fourth round after a senior year in which he caught 58 balls for 865 yards and five touchdowns. He's reportedly catching everything that comes his way right now.

Aaron Dobson had just 13 catches for 141 yards last season. GETTY IMAGES

Everybody else

Nate Washington, Keshawn Martin, Aaron Dobson, Chris Harper, DeAndre Carter, Devin Lucien
Going into his fourth NFL season, Aaron Dobson doesn't have much of a résumé. He finished with just 13 receptions last season. Injuries have plagued the first three seasons of his career, but perhaps this is the year he finally breaks out.

"I know he's training hard, looks like he's in good condition this year," Bill Belichick told reporters. "Hopefully he'll be able to stay on the field and continue to improve. I think that's really the key, you know. It's not just being healthy, but being healthy to practice and improve, and Aaron's worked hard, he's made some good catches, so hopefully he keeps climbing in that direction."

Aries Your instinct will be to act fast, but if you take a moment to think matters through and plan carefully, you will spare yourself a lot of grief.

Taurus You should participate in any group conversation or prospect that looks interesting. A take-charge attitude will help position you for advancement. Love and romance are in the stars.

Gemini A practical approach to whatever you do will help you stick to a budget and alleviate stress. Listen to an offer and ask questions. Avoid getting involved in an unstable situation.

Cancer Don't give in to demands or ultimatums. Deal with matters swiftly in order to have time to enjoy a few hours with someone who makes you feel good about yourself.

Leo Reconnect with old friends and colleagues. Visiting an old hangout will help resolve an emotional matter that has been holding you back. An investment will help your situation.

Virgo Discuss your plans with anyone affected by your decisions. Anger will solve nothing, but incorporating others' suggestions will help you avoid opposition. Offer incentives and rewards.

Libra Try something different, new and exciting. It will give you the pick-me-up you need and will provide some ideas that will encourage personal or professional changes.

Scorpio Consider every angle before you start something new. A partnership with someone who has as much to bring to the table as you looks rewarding. Romance is encouraged.

Sagittarius As soon as you deviate from what you promised to do, you will be put in an awkward position. Avoid a run-in with someone with the power to make your life miserable.

Capricorn Don't let your emotions take the reins. A balanced attitude will help you get the most out of what you do. Make suggestions, but don't let anyone lean on you.

Aquarius Resolve pending issues or try for a position that you feel suits your skill set. Do your best to bring about positive change. Go after exactly what you want.

Pisces Step up your game and take care of business before someone else takes charge. You will be ridiculed if you don't do your share, but rewarded for your effort. EUGENIA LAST
